E. E. RITTENHOUSE OF EQUITABLE LIFE DIES

Blood Poison Follows an Attack of Grip in His Home in Montclair.

WAS INSURANCE EXPERT

Instituted Many Reforms and Advances—Probed Provident
Savings Life.

Elmer Ellsworth Rittenhouse, prominent figure in the insurance world and assistant secretary of the Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States, died yesterday in his home in Montclair, N. J., after an operation for blood poisoning resulting from an infected tooth. He had previously had an attack of grip, but had been seriously ill less than two weeks.

Mr. Rittenhouse, who was descended from the same pioneer Dutch stock as bore the name in Philadelphia during the American Revolution, was born in New York city on June 8, 1861. He started his business career as a telephone operator, and moving to Colorado in 1885, became superintendent of the telegraphic system of the Colorado Midland Railway before leaving that field for newspaper work.

From 1898 until 1902 he travelled in Mexico, Korea, China, Japan and Europe, serving during a part of this time as special correspondent for the New York Herald. Upon returning to America he became editor of the Daily Telegraph of Colorado Springs, Colo., and attracted such widespread attention by his writing that he was chosen to reorganize the State Insurance Department and revise the insurance laws. He accomplished both tasks and his vigorous and effective work as Insurance Commissioner in fighting improper insurance practices and in supervising insurance companies for that State soon gained for him a national reputation.

One of Mr. Rittenhouse's most noted investigations was made into the affairs of the Provident Savings Life Assurance Society at a time when it was under charges of mismanaging its $70,000,000 insurance. By official inquiry and prompt action he frustrated an attempt to remove the society and its $10,000,000 assets to Philadelphia in a merger with a small assessment concern. Later another attempt to get the organization away from New York was foiled by his intervention.

When the Provident passed into the control of strong and conservative hands Mr. Rittenhouse was elected president and served in that capacity from 1905 until 1911, when he resigned to become conservation commissioner of the Equitable Life Assurance Society, in which position he established a health bureau for life insurance policy holders with free health examinations periodically. This new idea, so favorably received by medical authorities, was an interest in the work of the Life Extension Institute, and he assisted in the organization of that society in 1914 and was a recognized authority on mortality statistics.

Mr. Rittenhouse took a prominent part in the activities of the Association of Life Insurance Presidents, and served as a member of the special committee appointed by that body to consider the possible revision of the laws relating to policy reserves. He was a keen student of economic problems, on several occasions he presided before medical societies and a frequent contributor to the press on matters of health and life conservation.

Mr. Rittenhouse was a member of the National Republican Club, Builders' Sons of the Revolution and American Association for the Advancement of Science. He is survived by a widow, two daughters and a son.

PRESIDENT OF CHINA
DIES URGING PEACE

From Deathbed Sends Telegram to Warring Governors.

By the Associated Press.

PEKING, Dec. 30 (delayed).—Feng Kuo-Chang, third President of China, died here today. In a circular telegram issued from his deathbed to warring Governors he urged cessation of civil strife and reconciliation between the factions of the north and south.

Gen. Feng Kuo-Chang was born in the metropolitan province of Chihli, prefecture of Huichien, in 1858. Destined to a military career he attended the Pao-ting Military Academy and passed through the inferior grades of the army until he attained the presidency of the Pei-Hai Military Academy in 1905. At the outbreak of the first revolution in China he was in command of the Imperial Guards. He was placed at the head of the first army of Imperial troops and was sent to Hankow to suppress the rebellion. This he did with complete success, defeating the poorly trained and equipped troops of Li Yuan-Hung and Huan Hsing, who opposed him.

When Yuan Shih-Kai as one of the disturbers became the first President of China in 1912 he rewarded services of Gen. Feng by making him a hero and Governor of Chihli. He was made Governor of the important province of Kiangsu and field marshal for his achievements in the revolution of 1912, when he defeated the Southern Republicans under Chang Hsun at Nankin.

After this President Yuan invited Gen. Feng to come to Peking as chief of staff, but he elected to stay at Nankin, where he organized his followers in the Yangtze Valley and formed the Central Secretariat.

Gen. Feng remained President until September, 1918, when Shu-Shih Chang was regularly elected to the office. He was a firm supporter of the Entente Allies and it was during his incumbency that his approval was given to the resolution of the Chinese Cabinet declaring war upon Germany. This was in August, 1917, and President Feng then secured the Allies that he was ready to cooperate with them in prosecuting the war.
